I. The following procedures have been established for securing appropriate copyright on materials written by Hofstra personnel for printing by the University and sale in the Hofstra Bookstore:

A. Faculty will be asked to indicate at the time they present a document to the Office of Printing and Publications whether or not they want that document copyrighted in their name. If they want it copyrighted in their name, they will pay the current fee. The Office of Printing and Publications will provide them with the necessary papers, which they will

III. Software and Intellectual Rights

Respect for intellectual labor and creativity is vital to academic discourse and enterprise. This principle applied to works of all authors and publishers in all media. It encompasses respect for the right to acknowledgment, right to privacy, and right to determine the form, manner, and terms of publication and distribution.

Because electronic information is volatile and easily reproduced, respect for the work and personal expression of others is especially critical in computer environments. Violations of authorial integrity, including plagiarism, invasion of privacy, unauthorized access, and trade secret and copyright violations, may be grounds for sanctions against members of the academic community.

The above statement appears as part of the pamphlet:

Using Software - A Guide to the Ethical and Legal Use of software for Members of the Academic Community, published in 1987 by Educom and Adapso.
