

Drucilla Cornell, a widely influential philosopher and feminist theorist, died in Manhattan on December 12, 2022. For the past 25 years, she served as a founding member of the Board of Advisors of Hofstra's Center for the Study of Labor and Democracy.

Her many books and plays range across political and legal philosophy, ethics, deconstruction, critical theory, and feminism. She was Professor of Political Science, Comparative Literature and Women's & Gender Studies at Rutgers University the State University of New Jersey; Professor Extraordinaire at the University of Pretoria, South Africa; and a Visiting Professor at Birkbeck College, University of London. Before that, she taught for many years on the law faculties of the University of Pennsylvania and Cardozo Law School of Yeshiva University.

She received her undergraduate education at Stanford University and Antioch College and then earned a Juris Doctorate (J.D.) from the University of California Los Angeles (1981).

She is the author or co-author of nearly two dozen books, including The Imaginary Domain, The Philosophy of the Limit, and Law and Revolution in South Africa. In 2008-09, she held the National Research Foundation Chair in Customary Law, Indigenous Values, and the Dignity Jurisprudence at the University of Cape Town. There she founded the uBuntu project, which has produced several books and a documentary film, entitled uBuntu.